As with all issues in the Research Resource Series, the views expressed in this publication do not represent any official position on the part of the Social Policy Research Centre. The Research Resource Series is produced to make available the research findings of individual authors, and to promote the development of ideas and discussions about major areas of concern in the field of social policy.

Foreword

This Directory of Postgraduate Research in the Field of Social Policy is based on information supplied by various University Schools, Departments and Faculties throughout Australia in response to a questionnaire distributed by the Social Policy Research Centre.

The research described in the Directory represents a body of material which is rarely assembled in one place: current research in the field of social policy. The particular research gathered here is that of postgraduate students in either PhD or Masters by research programs. The breadth of topics which may be classed as social policy and the multidisciplinary nature of the research listed make this a very wide ranging document. The Directory is thus a resource which should be useful for a variety of disciplines and researchers.

The Social Policy Research Centre is very pleased to be associated with the work presented here. I should like to thank all those people who contributed to this Directory, particularly the students themselves and their supervisors and postgraduate co-ordinators. Their efforts have enabled this Directory to provide a worthy resource for social policy scholars. The amount of research being undertaken by postgraduate students in the field of social policy, as indicated by the entries in the Directory, is heartening and bodes well for the future of social policy in Australia.

Finally, I would like to thank the Commonwealth Department of Health, Housing, Local Government and Community Services for providing financial assistance, without which the whole exercise would not have been possible.

Peter Saunders
Director

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank all the people who contributed to this Directory, particularly the students, their supervisors and postgraduate co-ordinators.

I would like to acknowledge the assistance given by Julia Martin in assigning keywords and in editing the Directory. My thanks also to Sara Graham, Rose Melville, Diana Encel and Michael Fine for their help at various stages of the Directory's development.

Finally a special thanks to Lynda Pawley and Rudolf ElGuardo for their typing of this Directory.

Introduction

This Postgraduate Research Directory describes 510 current research projects in the field of social policy. These projects are being conducted by postgraduate students as either PhD or Masters by research throughout Australia. The Directory represents the first attempt to bring information about such work together in the one resource.

As with other innovations, however there are limitations to this Directory, some of which can be attributed to problems inherent in the postal survey method that was adopted for its compilation. Initially, over 700 survey forms were sent out to the appropriate Schools and Departments in every University in Australia. With the recent amalgamations and reforms in tertiary education it was difficult to obtain a comprehensive and accurate list of all the appropriate Departments and Faculties within the various institutions. We asked the heads of Faculties, Departments or Schools to pass our request letter to any other appropriate division within the University, in an effort to ensure all relevant people were contacted. Around three hundred responses were obtained in the first round and a reminder letter elicited a further two hundred responses. The information in these responses forms the body of this Directory. It is presented in the format described in the section below, each project being grouped in a section according to the University in which it is being undertaken. A total of 89 replies were received from University Departments reporting they currently had no postgraduate students conducting research in the field of social policy. These appear at the end of the Directory in Appendix Two.

A further limitation of the survey method for collecting the relevant research was the effect of self selection. We did not define social policy, nor did we provide guidelines for the type of research work which we would have considered suitable, preferring to cast as wide a net as possible for work in the field of social policy. Consequently a divergent range of research topics was submitted suggesting that social policy is being very broadly defined within academia. However, there may well be other institutions or sections within institutions which, because of a narrower or more specific definition of social policy, did not deem their students' work as suitable for submission to the Directory.

Although we have made every attempt within the resources available to ensure that the Directory is as comprehensive as possible, the diversity of research which may be considered as falling within the scope of social policy means that this Directory can only be an incomplete record.

Technical Note

This Directory has been compiled with information supplied from universities throughout Australia. This was obtained through the Social Policy Research Centre's request for information about the research being undertaken in the field of social policy by postgraduate students (see Appendix One for proforma and covering letter). The information presented in the Directory appears exactly as it was submitted to the Centre on the form. Where the responses were difficult to interpret, best estimates were made of the information. With over 500 entries in the Directory, it was not possible to contact each respondent to check spelling, and we apologise if we have misspelt any names.

Where any item of information was not supplied to us, such as a description of the research, or commencement date, we have excluded that data from the particular entry in the Directory.

The research topics have been arranged here under alphabetical listing by University and each entry has been given a record number. Keywords were assigned to indicate the nature of each project. These Keywords were assigned on the basis of information supplied and are therefore restricted by the quality of that information. In some instances the information provided was scant, affording few clues as to the possible nature of the research thus making the allocation of Keywords which might best describe it difficult. We believe the best efforts have been made to ensure that all research is fairly represented by the Keywords assigned. Multiple Keywords were assigned where this was thought appropriate. An index lists each Keyword which is followed by a group of record numbers indicating which research projects fall within that category. This index allows users with a special interest in a particular topic to find those projects relevant to that interest.

'Stage' in the degree has been variously defined as first, second, third or fourth, final, data collection, and examine. It appears that various universities use different terms for the progression through their postgraduate degrees. We have presented 'stage' as it appeared on each form submitted to us.

Addendum

Several forms from the University of Western Australia were received after the Directory had been compiled but before it went to press. It was not possible to include these forms in the existing grouping for the University of Western Australia, so a second entry for that University was created at the end of the Directory and the entries numbered accordingly. Keywords were assigned and referenced in the usual way. Thus the University of Western Australia appears twice in the alphabetical list of Universities.

Thesis Title: Equity and Distribution of Health Care.
Description: The equity issues surrounding the distribution of health and the distribution of health care in Australia have gained prominence in recent years with the publication of a number of substantive reports which highlight the differences in health status between population groups. The aim of this thesis is to examine the extent to which the Australian health care system allocates health care according to need. Using the 1989-90 Australian Health Survey, indicators of the need for health care and health service utilisation are derived to determine whether the distribution of health care (given the relative need for health care) favours particular socioeconomic groups.

Thesis Title: Family Factors in Young People's Runaway Behaviour
Description: This project researches the family circumstances of runaway young people. There is a body of literature about the phenomenon in the USA and a growing interest in Australia. This research canvasses that literature and interest, to focus upon what is happening in and around families to contribute to the incidence of runaway behaviour.

Request Letter Sent to All Universities Throughout Australia

9 March 1993

Dear Head of School

POSTGRADUATE RESEARCH IN THE FIELD OF SOCIAL POLICY: DIRECTORY AND WORKSHOP

I am writing to all Heads of Departments and Schools in Australian tertiary institutions in which social policy research is currently conducted, to seek assistance in the compilation of a Directory of Current Postgraduate Research in the field of Social Policy.

The aim of the Directory is to:

- * identify the range of social policy research being undertaken by postgraduate students across the nation, providing a useful resource for scholars, academics and policy makers.
- * assist the Social Policy Research Centre to convene a Workshop, which will bring together a number of postgraduate students, academics and policy makers to discuss the students' research and, more generally, to explore the links between current policy developments and academic work in progress.

It is proposed that the Workshop, which is sponsored by the Department of Health Housing and Community Services, will be held regularly at the Centre (possibly annually) and the cost of all those who attend will be subsidized. We expect the inaugural Workshop to take place at the University of New South Wales on 18-20 July 1993, after the Social Policy Conference.

I should appreciate it if you would provide details of all students within your Department or School currently undertaking postgraduate research work in any field of social policy, either through a PhD or Masters by research. The few details we seek are printed on the enclosed forms.

Please complete all the details on a separate form for each student and forward this information in the enclosed reply paid envelope. We shall not be contacting students directly at this stage but would be grateful if you would inform them that their name has been submitted for inclusion in the Directory.

In order to facilitate the organisation of the Workshop we should be grateful if your reply could reach us by 16 April 1993. We shall provide you with more details of the Workshop at a later date and a copy of the Directory, on request. If there are no postgraduate students in your school would you be kind enough to send this letter and accompanying forms to other relevant Heads of Department.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Yours sincerely

Dr Natalie Bolzan
Research Fellow
